4. SIGNIFICANCE:

Dale Drive, originally called Chicken Street, was formerly the access road to Frederick G. Bourne's expansive farm, the entrance to which was located at the end of Dale. However, before Mr. Bourne purchased the land in 1900, four houses existed on Dale Drive: The Scherpinesse House, the Nelson House, the Edward Carlson House, and the John Carlson House. At the time of Bourne's purchase of the surrounding land, and moving his farm from its original location at Indian Neck (Now the W.O.R.C.), a number of buildings were also moved from other locations on the Bourne Estate. #'s 23 and 17 were originally the Boathouse; #31 was the Gatelodge; #25 was the Workmen's Boarding; #32, The Messler House, home of Bourne's chief Mechanic.
